PAINTED HILLS

The Painted Hills is an actual place in northeast Oregon. It is also a description of my paintings. The hills get their name from stratified colored layers of soil. My paintings are also stratified, layer by layer, color by color.

I like the idea of using a road trip as a metaphor for my painting.

The landscape changes as we move through expansive landlines onto small winding roads. We can start traveling in one direction then turn onto another path. My painting can start in one place and then change layer by layer. Finally these layers converge into a distillation of time and place, color and shape.

The painting is done and I am home.
